MIDPOINT IN TOPEKA: WHAT SURVIVED — AND WHAT IT SIGNALS

The Kansas Legislature has reached its midpoint. Turnaround week separated the measures that will advance into the second half of the session from those that will not. While debates ranged from education policy to public benefits and regulatory reform, the week clarified priorities — particularly around institutional authority, regulatory oversight, and the boundaries of executive power.

Below is a focused recap of floor action, followed by the legislative box score at the break and a preview of what comes next.

TURNAROUND 2026: DEFINING BOUNDARIES

Turnaround week in Topeka is usually about survival — which bills make it past the midpoint. This year, it was also about defining boundaries.

The most visible moment came with the Kansas Legislature's override of the governor's veto of Senate Bill 244. The Senate voted 31–9 to override, and the House followed with an 87–37 vote, exceeding the required two-thirds threshold. The margins reflected firm majority support and unified minority opposition.

Beyond that flashpoint, structural changes dominated.

In elections, the House voted 72–50 to repeal the state's Mail Ballot Election Act. Other measures advanced to centralize venue authority for constitutional election lawsuits and strengthen voter roll verification processes.

On civil liability, the Senate advanced reforms to courtroom practice. At the same time, lawmakers moved in a bipartisan direction on pharmacy benefit managers. A 32–8 Senate vote expanded state oversight of pharmacy benefit managers and addressed pricing transparency.

Legislation regarding energy regulation also moved forward, with broad support for updating the gas system reliability surcharge framework.

Meanwhile, the House approved an extension of the governor's World Cup emergency declaration, but the Senate adjourned without acting — a reminder that executive authority remains sensitive terrain.

After two days of floor action, the Senate adjourned midweek. Turnaround concluded Thursday evening with House adjournment. Both chambers will return next week to begin work on bills that survived the deadline and to start the second half of the session.

Turnaround 2026 showed a legislature focused less on expansion and more on control — over elections, litigation, regulation, and executive power — with selective bipartisan alignment where market oversight was concerned.

TURNAROUND AT A GLANCE

The Kansas Legislature has reached the traditional turnaround break, the point at which most bills must pass their chamber of origin to stay alive. Measures that do not advance generally fall away unless referred to an exempt committee, a procedural step often called being "blessed."

Below is the legislative box score at the break.

House of Representatives

- Total number of bills introduced: 377
- Bills passed: 151
- Concurrent resolutions passed: 7
- Bills referred to an exempt committee: 0 blessed
- Bills stricken from the debate calendar: 24
- Bills remaining in all House committees: 541

Senate

- Total number of bills introduced: 216
- Bills passed: 62
- Concurrent resolutions passed: 6
- Bills referred to an exempt committee: 23 blessed
- Bills stricken from the debate calendar: 0
- Bills remaining in Senate committees: 380

COMING SOON: "IN THEIR OWN WORDS"

In the weeks ahead, Kansas Legislative Insights will introduce a new recurring feature: "In Their Own Words." Each edition will present three focused questions to a member of the Kansas Legislature. Responses will be limited in length, lightly edited for clarity and grammar, and published only after review and approval. No commentary will be added.
