

GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS & PUBLIC POLICY LAW

OVERVIEW

The influence of governmental and governmental-related activities on businesses and organization is growing. For businesses to be successful a number of public policy planning steps are required. Some of these include a thorough evaluation of business issues, an understanding of the impact of local, state and federal laws and regulations on these issues, carefully constructed strategies and tactics to achieve the business objectives, and effective, timely advocacy. Foulston Siefkin's Governmental Affairs and Public Policy Law Team helps clients through this process to achieve their public policy goals.

Foulston Siefkin is the state's largest law firm, with offices in Topeka, Kansas City and Wichita. For this reason, Foulston Siefkin has unique resources in interpreting Kansas law and in understanding and navigating local governmental bodies, Kansas courts and the state's regulatory commissions. Foulston Siefkin's Public Policy Law and Governmental Affairs team helps clients understand the ramifications of state laws and regulations on businesses. Our attorneys are able to give legal interpretation and analysis to identify legal hurdles and help develop comprehensive plans for direct advocacy with governmental decision makers. Given that Foulston Siefkin has offices in Wichita, Kansas City, and Topeka, and represents a wide variety of clients that regularly need guidance on their interactions with governmental actors, Foulston Siefkin is well-positioned to assist clients on a plethora of issues requiring engagement with governmental actors at the municipal, county, state, and national levels. For complex issues, the team is able to draw upon the experience of the firm's other practice area attorneys including business, energy, environmental, employment and labor, healthcare, intellectual property, real estate, and tax. If needed, our team can recommend outside professionals best suited to the issue and coordinate the assembled professional team on behalf of our clients to achieve the desired outcome.

An additional resource for our clients is Foulston Siefkin's membership in State Law Resources. State Law Resources, Inc. is an international network of independent law firms that helps businesses, trade associations and public policy coalitions navigate the complex and time-consuming process of managing both legal issues and state governmental relations. In the US, State Law Resources has one firm from each state and the District of Columbia. Every firm has a state capital presence. Firms are selected for
