PROFILE

Randy Carlson is a business and estate planning attorney in Foulston's Kansas City office. Randy brings four decades of experience to his clients' wide-ranging wealth planning issues and provides counsel and advice to his clients on their estate planning, charitable, real estate, and tax matters. He routinely represents high-net-worth individuals, providing individualized and comprehensive legal advice to help achieve his clients' goals and objectives. Randy enjoys a collaborative practice with his clients' other advisors, including accountants, trust officers, financial advisors, and bankers.

Randy's practice encompasses estate and tax planning, trust and probate administration, planning for qualified retirement plans, gift and estate tax planning, and business succession planning. He is skilled in the utilization of lifetime gift techniques, family limited partnerships, charitable trusts, and various irrevocable trusts. Randy also advises individual and professional fiduciaries on the legal, tax, and related issues arising in the context of estate and trust administration, and serves as legal counsel to closely held businesses, advising on corporate matters. He has worked extensively with his clients' real estate transactions, including purchases, sales, exchanges, and related ownership and management issues.
