PROFILE

Sarah Stula is an associate in Foulston's Kansas City office where she is a member of the Kansas City Litigation and Employment practice group. Her practice includes employment disputes, commercial litigation, insurance defense, and appellate advocacy.

Sarah defends employers from discrimination, harassment, and retaliation claims and reviews company policies for compliance with state and federal laws. She advises employers on a wide range of employment matters and contributes to several employment law publications. She also resolves disputes arising from post-employment covenants and represents insurance companies and their insureds in vehicle accident cases.

Before joining Foulston, Sarah clerked at the Kansas Supreme Court for three years, gaining appellate expertise in a variety of civil and criminal matters. Building on this experience, Sarah now advocates for clients in state and federal appellate courts. In law school, Sarah could often be found in the courtroom—in moot court, mock trial, or serving as a public defender in her law school's criminal defense clinic. From law school to private practice, Sarah is a litigator at heart and enjoys advocating for her clients in trial and appellate courts.
